Amazon Warehouse Workers Win Fight for Paid Time Off as Company Condemned for &

39;Reckless’ Labor Practices

Amid condemnation over Amazon’s treatment of its employees during the global coronavirus pandemic, the company released a memo to its 800,000-strong workfor ce stating that starting Monday, all part-time and seasonal employees will be pe mitted to submit paid time off (PTO) requests, just as full-time workers can.

The new policy is simply a confirmation of what’s stated in the company’s s employee manual, wrote a group of warehouse workers in Chicago known as DCH1 A mazonians United.

After organizing last year to make sure they have access to clean drinking water at their work facility and successfully pressuring their managers to address th e problem, with 150 workers signing a petition, the workers took on the company in January over its refusal to grant them PTO.

When they confronted their managers with their demand and the stated policy, the group wrote, the management “gave us all sorts of excuses saying ‘this policy doesn’t apply to y’all because you’re part-time workers’ despite the policy stating that associates who regularly work over 20 hours, li ke us, get PTO. Then management claimed that we don’t get PTO because we’re ‘Class Q employees’ which we had never heard of before.”

“Seeing firsthand how Amazon’s response to this pandemic was (and still) Tj T* B o act,” DCH1 Amazonians United wrote.

The workers warned that the company has already created a loophole in its latest promise to provide its employees with PTO, combining the company’s PTO with the paid sick leave mandated by laws in some parts of the country.

“We have to keep fighting so that Amazon gives us our PTO on top of the sic k time we already have,” the group wrote. “This means that we need to grow solidarity between our workplaces and grow into a national movement. We nee d our Sick Time for when we’re sick. We need our PTO for when we need some P
